Introduction

April 12, 2011 marked the beginning of a four year national observance of the 150th anniversary of the Civil War. Maine played a significant role in that war to save the union and end slavery, contributing more than 70,000 troops, national leaders such as Vice President Hannibal Hamlin and Secretary of the Treasury William Pitt Fessenden, and such notable generals as Joshua L. Chamberlain and Oliver Otis Howard.

Well before the fighting ended on April 9, 1865, efforts were underway to record the events and participants of the war. Throughout the four year conflict, the Adjutant General collected photographs of hundreds of Maine officers and preserved regimental records, field reports, and correspondence, all now at the Maine State Archives. In 1864 Bangor erected the first of more than 175 Civil War monuments throughout the state. On a personal level, soldiers and their families saved diaries and letters which contained vivid first hand accounts of the conflict.

Shortly after the war, a sizable literature emerged devoted to Maine in the Civil War. State military units were memorialized through the publication of regimental histories, one of the first of which was Edward B. Houghton's 1866 volume The Campaigns of the Seventeenth Maine. In 1957 John J. Pullen redefined this genre in modern terms when he wrote his classic book The Twentieth Maine. Following Pullen's example of telling a regiment's story in human terms are three more recent volumes, James H. Mundy's engaging accounts of the Second and Sixth regiments and Thomas A. Desjardin's indepth study of the Twentieth Maine at Gettysburg.

The Sesquicentennial years are a particularly appropriate time for Maine residents and visitors to broaden their knowledge of the state's Civil War history. The Maine State Archives, the Maine

Historical Society, the Maine State Library, and many local libraries, historical societies, and museums are prepared to assist the public in learning more about this compelling chapter in our past.

To aid in the discovery process, the Maine State Library has compiled this excellent list of publications in its collection. Comprised of three parts, this useful bibliography covers General Resources; Memoires, Diaries and Correspondence; and Regimental Histories. To these categories, I would add that the Maine State Library and many other institutions have major holdings in Civil War period newspapers, which are an invaluable source of information about both the home front and the battle front between 1861 and 1865.

In his first inaugural address, Abraham Lincoln spoke of “the mystic cords of memory, stretching from every battlefield, and patriot grave, to every living heart and hearthstone, all over this broad land.” In 1861 Lincoln was referring to the American Revolution, but his words apply as well to our generation’s sense of connection to the Civil War from the perspective of 150 years. On the pages of this bibliography are the books which contain “the mystic cords of memory” that link us to a defining moment in the history of our state and nation.
